

Recruitment Submission Pack

After a screening call you record a quick voice note. It turns that, plus the resume, into a client-ready write-up and submission email in the format you already use. All you do is check it and send.

20 → 2 MIN

per submission write-up, call to ready to send

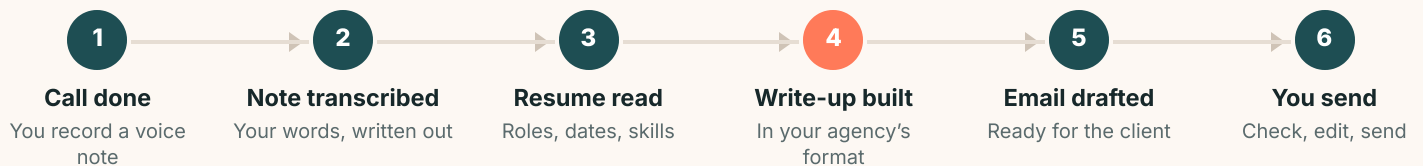

Based on 60 submissions a month at ~20 minutes each by hand

THE PROBLEM

The screening call is over and the candidate is good. Now someone has to turn the notes and the resume into a write-up the client will read, in the agency's format, then write the submission email. It takes the next slot in a busy day, so strong candidates reach the client late.

HOW IT WORKS

WHAT YOU GET

20 → 2 min

per submission, from the call to a draft ready to send

1 format

the same write-up layout for every candidate

Same day

candidates reach the client while they're still warm

GUARDRAILS

- Only what you said. The write-up uses the resume and your voice note. It never invents experience.
- You keep the final say. Every submission is a draft you check before it sends.
- Candidate data stays yours. It runs in your accounts, not ours.

WHAT THE SYSTEM DOES

- Takes a voice note you record after the screening call
- Reads the candidate's resume
- Writes the client-ready write-up in your format
- Drafts the submission email to go with it
- Leaves you one thing to do: check and send

BUSINESS VALUE

ILLUSTRATIVE ROI

If a write-up and submission email takes about 20 minutes by hand:

60 submissions a month ≈ 20 hours

That's about two and a half workdays a month back, about $12K a year in recruiter time, and strong candidates reach the client the same day.

Illustrative math, not a measured client result.
